CASE STUDY: Amica Insurance Opens West Coast Sales Call Center in Henderson

A strong education foundation lays the groundwork for a healthy community, which is one of the reasons Amica Insurance opened its West Coast sales call center in Henderson in December 2009.

“They chose Henderson because it’s known for its high quality of life for employees and it’s bilingual population,” said Katie Ware, sales and client services manager, when the project was announced. The center’s turnover rate the first year was under 20 percent whereas 35 to 40 percent is typical for a call center. “What this means to me is people are staying with us and they’re happy,” she said.

Amica Mutual Insurance Company is the nation’s oldest mutual insurer of automobiles. Founded in 1907, the company’s corporate headquarters located in Lincoln, R.I. offers its customers automobile, homeowners, marine and personal umbrella liability insurance. Life coverage is also available through Amica Life Insurance Company, a wholly owned subsidiary. Amica employs more than 3,200 people in 40 offices across the country.

Need More Incentive?

The Las Vegas region, approaching a population of 2 million, is home to a growing labor force. Of the new residents who relocate to the region every month, nearly 15 percent of them already possess professional, management or technical skills. Today, a workforce of more than 1 million people lives within a 25-minute commute of Henderson-area business parks, allowing the opportunity for Henderson-based businesses to attract employees for all positions and skill levels.

Henderson residents boast the highest educational attainment in the region and the city attracts a high percentage of the workforce-age population.

In addition, workers’ compensation rates are lower and drastically less than those of California and are very competitive with other surrounding states. Nevada also caps each employee salary, per policy year, at $36,000 maximum, thereby creating reduced workers’ compensation premiums compared to states that use full payroll for calculations.

Several incentive programs are available for select companies to provide further “start-up” savings. The City of Henderson’s Economic Development Division representatives can help you identify whether any of these programs may be available for your company. This team has more than 40 years of experience helping businesses expand.
